Recall of Pepper Coated Salame Products

Just before midnight on Friday, January 22, Daniele, Inc. announced a voluntary recall of its Pepper Coated Salame products because of possible concerns about salmonella. Samples of the black pepper used to coat some of our products have tested positive for salmonella.

The company has changed its spice suppliers, its specifications for spices, and is now using only irradiated pepper.

This recall is being undertaken in cooperation with the U.S Department of Agriculture and local health departments. The company is working with distributors and retailers to remove the products on the list below from store shelves.

Anyone having any of the following products should return the product for a full refund at the point of purchase.
